LEGISLATIVE DAY 34 OF 40

Hello Partners! Welcome back to the Night Owl 🦉, your nightly recap of need-to-know information and intel on what's happening under the Gold Dome.

As the legislative session enters its final stretch, activity under the Gold Dome is accelerating. Decisions are increasingly being shaped not only by public debate, but by behind-the-scenes negotiations that often determine whose priorities actually move forward.

In the Senate, Republican leaders continue advancing proposals framed as “tax relief,” including measures that would further reduce or restructure how Georgia collects revenue. While these efforts are being marketed as putting money back into people’s pockets, advocates warn that continued cuts to one of the state’s largest funding sources could weaken investments in public schools, health care, and infrastructure. The question remains whether these policies will deliver meaningful relief for working families or primarily benefit those already doing well.

Election policy is also back in focus. Alongside legislative conversations about replacing Georgia’s voting machines, the State Election Board is pushing to accelerate a shift away from QR codes on ballots. Supporters say the move could improve “transparency,” but the timeline raises a lot of concerns about whether counties will have the resources and support needed to implement changes without creating confusion and new barriers for voters.

With Sine Die approaching, the pace is only expected to intensify. The decisions made in these final days will determine not just which bills pass, but whether lawmakers choose to invest in long-term stability for Georgians or continue prioritizing short-term political wins.

We hope you enjoy The Night Owl. Please let us know if you have any suggestions for additional content!
